It does read like the Town/ Parish/ Ward councillors are simply being tolerated and speaking from experience it is very hard to create suitable names. This is often because of the regular changeover of Councillors making suggestions rendering it very difficult to immediately recall recent suggestions and which have been adopted and which rejected. So if some sort of file per Town /ward/ area holding suggestions successful and not successful over the years was held by the naming department but accessible somehow by the local area when required to start creating names again probably after some months but normally years would prove less difficult and wholly more systematic and I would think more likely to hold a clue to the history or background to the area. Maybe the Parish could keep records but might need some back information to get started.

Dawlish Town Council would like to suggest that it is made a requirement that every house with a number sign also has the street name printed on the sign. This is to help avoid any confusion on which address/ street the house is on.
